DEATH STALKS THE HUNTERS

A MOURNFUL wind whipped around the [illegible] cabin and whistled at the chimney top. Icy snow from the north lashed against the rough walls and beat like a snare drummer on the tiny window.

Four men sat at a round table, playing cards. The game was desultory. The players' hearts were not in it. They were nervous and apprehensive. They eyed each other with suspicion.

The dealer's hands shook as he began to shuffle. He was sure one of his companions was a murderer. He hadn't the slightest inkling which one. But he had no doubt the killer intended to finish off the other and make away with the gold. The killer would have plenty of time to knock off the others, cooped up as they were in the cabin with the buzzard making escape impossible.

The dealer was not alone in his fears. A pall of terror seemed to be descending over the room.

The cursed gold! That was why they had undertaken a pleasure trip into a [illegible] The men had come up into the deep woods, high in the mountains, for some [illegible] where they got their cash. They found a dead man. He had been dead a long time. It had been a shocking discovery when they found the man's bag of gold. It was quite a tidy sum.

"What luck!" Smith had [illegible]

"We're rich," Johnson laughed. "Or at least we're rich 'till we start to divvy up the ways!"

"Real gold! There's the touch of it!" exclaimed Hammerlock, greedily.

Barney and Fleer [illegible] the gruesome information.

"Three nights in... Barney was dead.

All he stood was [illegible] feet from the cabin, a rifle shot had split the back of his head. Unfortunately no one of the other men were together when it happened. None had an alibi. All were suspects. They'd been [illegible] digging a grave for Barney when the buzzard struck. They were forced to seek shelter together in the [illegible] certain that one of their companions was a cold-blooded murderer, but [illegible] no notion of which one it was!

Johnson threw down his cards and pounded the table. The sudden action, the [illegible] reported [illegible] best against [illegible]

"Sorry I startled [illegible]" he said. "I am [illegible] on edge as the rest of [illegible] Or at least, as the rest of [illegible] We're [illegible] the same thing. We're all thinking that one of us [illegible] Barney [illegible]"

And three of us are thinking that the other one plans [illegible] the storm [illegible] the buzzard keeps on, we'll be cooped up here [illegible] days [illegible] a week. I say let's organize to protect ourselves."

"Organize! But how?" asked Hammerlock. "We don't know who the [illegible] the murderer!"

"We'll take turns watching," suggested Johnson. "That way we'll each get [illegible] of us sleep. Then we'll trade. That way the killer won't have a chance to get [illegible] another!"

"Sleep? I could never sleep!" exclaimed Fleer.

"Me neither," said Smith.

"There must have been [illegible] watch!" Johnson declared. "How about it, Hammerlock? Shall we grab [illegible]"

"I'll try," responded Hammerlock.

[illegible] the [illegible] of a double-deck bunk. Hammerlock took the [illegible] Johnson was [illegible] Hammerlock had to [illegible] himself to keep his eyes [illegible]

PRESENTLY Fleer whispered to Smith, "I [illegible] he's the [illegible]" He [illegible] Johnson. "Look at him sleeping. Not [illegible] about anything. Must be [illegible]"

"Maybe," Smith was dubious. "Johnson always was a cool one. He could sleep [illegible]"

"I'm not taking any chances," said Fleer. He walked to the gun [illegible]

"What are you doing?" asked Smith.

"I'm getting my gun in case he [illegible]" nodded toward Johnson, starts anything."

"I'm getting [illegible] too," said Smith, moving swiftly to the gun rack. "In case anybody starts anything." He said the latter with a meaningful look at Fleer.

The three men sat for some time in silence, guns across their knees, nervously watching each other and at the same time keeping an eye on the two sleepers in sight.

SUDDENLY, [illegible] upper bunk, and [illegible] swung an arm above his head [illegible] getting gun" shouted Fleer, excitedly. He aimed his rifle at Johnson.

"F[illegible]" cried Smith, whacking down Fleer's gun. But his action was too late. The barrel [illegible] just enough so that the full force of the burst caught Hammerlock in the chest as he sat up in his bunk.

Fleer now [illegible]y excited, turned his gun on Smith, crying "So you're the one, you murderer!"

But Smith [illegible] the [illegible]. He blasted down Fleer at close range.

Sometime [illegible]ng [illegible] seconds after the shooting, Johnson had leaped from his bunk to the gun rack. He [illegible] while now as he spoke to Smith. "Self-defense," he said. "I saw it all. The guy was [illegible] before."

Smith was shaking now that the reaction had [illegible] He looked down at the [illegible] Fleer, then over at Hammerlock who lay dead [illegible] his own.

Two more dead men! Was one of them the murderer? [illegible] Johnson or Smith? The question electrified the air.

"Why'd he shoot Hammerlock?" asked Johnson.

"H—he was [illegible]ming at [illegible]," stuttered Smith. "I knocked his gun down."

"[illegible]ks," said Johnson. "What was he doing?"

"You [illegible] your arm [illegible] your own [illegible] I think."

Johnson [illegible] thoughtfully [illegible] moment. Then he said, "Smith, as an [illegible] man just got [illegible] Maybe two men. You and I are not [illegible] can trust each other. [illegible] take precautions against accidents. Just [illegible] some insurance against either [illegible] trigger [illegible]. Let's [illegible] the [illegible] tha snow."

Smith agreed with [illegible]. The door was opened and the guns hurled into the raging blizzard.

Johnson threw [illegible] against the door as he [illegible] in the face of the howling wind. "Well, now I feel better," he said. "At least I don't think you'll be able to choke me with your bare hands." He laughed, but the laugh wasn't quite natural.

Smith said, "Yes, I feel better, too. You won't be able to shoot me and you won't be able to choke [illegible]. His eyes were wide with fear. Instinctively he backed against the wall. The [illegible] reaction had come to him that Johnson could choke him. [illegible] easily, [illegible] muscled, [illegible] outweighed the [illegible] Smith by [illegible] pounds.

Panic seized Smith. He [illegible] for the door, yanked it open, [illegible]ped through, slammed it behind him and [illegible] into the deep snow. Johnson leaped to the door, pulled it open with his [illegible]g hand, and yelled for Smith to come back. From somewhere in the whirling, [illegible] snow came back the [illegible]eterical scream. "You'll never get me, Johnson! Never! Never!"

Johnson [illegible] the door against the howling wind. Despite his calm exterior, his own nerves were [illegible] on edge. He was alone in a mountain cabin with two dead men. Outside, in the dead grip of the cold, was Smith. Smith sounded insane; crazed with fear or crazed with murder. Johnson wondered.

Was Smith was the murderer? Maybe he [illegible]ng [illegible] a [illegible] thing. Johnson. Maybe he'd try to sneak back in, armed [illegible] decided to seek [illegible] place. His desperation [illegible] at last. A [illegible] ceiling. He opened it and crawled [illegible]g.

It was but a [illegible]

As Johnson moved [illegible] big [illegible] hole [illegible] Dust [illegible] all around. Nobody had been up there [illegible] on a [illegible], dusty and [illegible] as [illegible] a [illegible] was.
